

Life on Earth

The first living creatures appeared on Earth some 3,500 million years ago. They were tiny bacteria that emerged in the water and did not need oxygen to live. From these living beings have evolved to adapt to the changes occurring around them. When passing from sea to land, many new species were born, including the early ancestors of humans, almost five million years ago.

SO IT BEGAN

The first organisms emerged in the water. They were very simple, single-celled organisms. Then more complex organisms appeared, such as algae and worms and, later, fish, amphibians, etc. After studying the evolution, biologists divided the Earth's history into four stages or eras.

OXYGEN

accumulated in the atmosphere about 2,500 million years ago allowing life out of water.

FROM WATER TO LAND

Some fish first evolved into amphibians and then into reptiles as they crawled out of water.

FISH
Appeared about 400 million years.

THE KINGDOM OF THE DINOSAURS

After a mass extinction of many species, reptiles, and especially, dinosaurs dominated the planet.

GREAT EVOLUTION OF HUMANS

With the disappearance of the dinosaurs, mammals and birds expanded greatly.

OUR ANCESTORS

Humans appeared in Africa five million years ago.

THE ICE AGE

During extreme stages of the ice age, the temperature dropped and the animals and plants of the Earth had to survive with the climate. The mammoth and woolly mammoth were the most common animals of the ice age.

EXTINCTION

The dinosaurs disappeared from Earth because of a large meteorite that hit the planet. The great impact caused abrupt changes in climate that these animals were not able to bear.
