Abstract The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week training program on the physical fitness and health of sedentary, middle-aged men. The program consisted of three sessions per week, each lasting 45 minutes. The program included aerobic, strength, and flexibility exercises. The results of the study showed that the men who participated in the program experienced significant improvements in their physical fitness and health. The men who participated in the program had significantly higher levels of aerobic fitness, strength, and flexibility than the men who did not participate. The men who participated in the program also had significantly lower levels of body fat and blood pressure than the men who did not participate. The results of this study suggest that a 12-week training program can be an effective way to improve the physical fitness and health of sedentary, middle-aged men.
