Tracking the Big Horn

Big horn sheep, Ovis montanus, are a majestic symbol of the mountains West. They browse at high altitudes and in steep, rocky areas from Texas to British Columbia. Rams' horns curl around their eyes and grow up to 45 inches long. Males build horns to establish dominance during the fall rut (mating season). Rams (males) sport spurs, spurs being similar to a mountain goat's. From their first days of life, big horns are watched through for male riffs (or sheep for most predators to follow)....

Two centuries ago, an estimated 1.5 million to 2 million big horn sheep lived in North America. Today, a mere 25,000 remain. Diseases caught from domestic sheep, competition from livestock for forage, and bophs hunting for their horns caused populations to plummet (drop rapidly). Big horn graze in mountain meadows, herds that is being lost to expanding forests, which are growing beyond their historic boundaries in part because the wildfires that are used to hold them in check have been suppressed. Glacier National Park, home to 400 to 600 big horn sheep, lists the animal as a "species of concern," that is, at risk of becoming endangered....

The feeding activity of the big horn sheep is best described as

- (1) consumers feeding on autotrophs
(2) autotrophs feeding on decomposers
(3) decomposers feeding on consumers
(4) autotrophs feeding on heterotrophs
