Merry Wives and Others Penelope Fritzer, Bartholomew Bland, 2010-06-28. In many ways, the history of domestic humor writing is also a history of domestic life in the twentieth century. For many years, domestic humor was written primarily by females; significant contributions from male writers began as times and family structures changed. It remains timeless because of its basis on the relationships between husbands and wives, parents and children, houses and inhabitants, pets and their owners, chores and their doers, and neighbors. This work is a historical and literary survey of humorists who wrote about home. It begins with a chapter on the social context of and attitudes toward traditional domestic roles and housewives. The following chapters, beginning with the 1920s and continuing through today, cover the different time periods and the foremost American domestic humorists and the humor written by surrogate parents, grown children about their childhood families, husbands, and Canadian and English writers. Also covered are the differences among various writers toward traditional domestic roles: some like Erma Bombeck and Judith Viorst embraced them, while others like Caryl Kristenson and Marilyn Kentz resisted them. Common themes such as the isolation and competitiveness of housework, home as an idealized metaphysical goal and ongoing physical challenge, and the urban, suburban, and rural life are also explored. The New York Times Magazine, 2003.

The Careerfree Life Gillian Hemstock, Frank McEnaney, 1986. Gillian Hemstock's Careerfree Life is bound to serve as an alternative for people sick of the notion of needing a career to be successful. The authors question the importance and validity of choosing a career-centric lifestyle, asserting that a person doesn't need a career to have an easier, financially simpler, and even more enjoyable life.
