Unit 3: How-to Books

Session 11: Elaboration in how-to books: Writers guide readers with warnings, suggestions, and tips.

Connection	Tell a story about a time when tips and advice were helpful, such as learning how to ride a bike. Someone may have told you to ride on a smooth surface, tighten your helmet, wear pants to protect your legs, in case you fell, etc. Explain that these tips really helped you.
Teaching Point	"Today I want to teach you that in how-to books, writers don't just teach the steps. They also add little warnings and tips. They do this by thinking about how the learner could go wrong then adding advice to keep that from happening."
Teach	Read the mentor text aloud and have students raise their hand when they hear a warning or tip.
Active Engagement	Allow a student to read one of the class texts aloud as you act it out. While you act, have things happen that should not occur, such as dropping a heavy jar, missing the ball when you kick, etc. Have students turn and tell their partner some tips or warnings that would have prevented you from making these mistakes. Add some of the warning students suggested to the writing. Add warning, suggestions, and tips to the chart of learning from a mentor how-to text.
Link	Encourage students to go back and reread how-to books they have already read to find places where they can add warnings, suggestions, or tips.
Mid-workshop Teaching Point	Tell students that when they need help thinking of tips, they should think about what their mom would say. Moms are full of advice and that can be helpful to think about when writing a how-to book. These tips keep things from going wrong.
Share	Create a chart labeled "Warnings, Suggestions, and Tips." Include words that students often use such as "be careful," "watch out," "I suggest," or "don't." Ask students if they used each of these phrases. Allow students who did utilize one of these to share out loud to the group. Tell students that if they come up with other good phrases to let you know so you can add them to the chart.
