

Chemistry Notes Class 11 Chapter 3

Classification of Elements and Periodicity in Properties

Classification of Elements

With the discovery of a large number of elements, it became difficult to study the elements individually, so classification of elements was done to make the study easier.

Earlier Attempts to Classify Elements

Many attempts were made to classify the known elements from time to time. The earlier attempts are as follows:

Prout's Hypothesis (1815)

According to this theory, hydrogen atom was considered as the fundamental unit from which all other atoms were made. It is also known as unitary theory.

Dobereiner's Triads (1829)

Dobereiner classified the elements into groups of three elements with similar properties in such a manner so that the atomic weight of the middle element was the arithmetic mean of the other two, e.g.,

Element	Li	Na	K
Atomic weight	7	23	39

$$\text{Mean of atomic masses} = (7 + 39) / 2 = 23$$

Similarly Cl, Br, I; Ca, Sr, Ba are two more examples of such triads.

Limitations Dobereiner could not arrange all the elements known at that time into triads. He could identify only three such triads that have been mentioned.

Newland's Octaves (1864) (Law of Octaves)

Newland states that when elements are arranged in order of increasing atomic masses, every eighth element has properties similar to the first just like in the musical note [Every eighth musical note is the same as the first mentioned note]. This can be illustrated as given below
