

Readings in Philippine History

Content and Contextual Analysis of Selected Primary Sources in Philippine History

Learning Objectives

At the end of the lesson, students must be able to:

1. Familiarize oneself with the primary documents in different historical periods of the Philippines;
2. Interpret primary sources through examining the content and context of the document;
3. Understand the context behind selected document.

Professor's Note:

We have discussed the inevitable and inescapable influence between and among historians who are writing or interpreting history. I have shared how these biases work on both sides of the contradicting, conflicting or arguing views or perspectives of the different scholars, academicians or the historians. Writing the example:

Filipino historians or authors would adhere to the fact that we are being ruled and controlled by the Spanish tyrants. We firmly believed that they have brought so much abuses, violence and injustices to our country.

On the other hand, Spanish historians or colonizers would just stand with the fact that they have brought the light to our dark ages. They would claim that they have come to the Philippines as friends, brothers or sisters. Eventually, they have introduced or left us their legacy on Christianity.

In the tertiary education, we are just comprehensively reading and understanding selected primary sources or documents that would tell a story on our country's history. With your studies from primary to secondary education, Philippine history is always integrated. Assumedly, with regards to our colonial era, you might have gained, obtained or generated different views and perspectives on our history based on your textbooks and further studies that is mostly negative.

However, personally, with further critics, comprehensive reading and understanding on the life, works and writings of our national hero (GEC 105 – one of your subjects next semester if I am not mistaken). Dr. Jose Protacio Mercado Rizal, we can infer that he is just a reformist. Being a reformist, our national hero did not really want total or an absolute freedom from the Spaniards, he only aimed for change, a change in political system especially the governance and control of the Dominican friars. Just a change of people (implementing the system) but not to vanish or abolish them.
