

Barriers to Trade

The harmonization of national export and import policies has led to a system wherein all the goods of governments have the same international-trade possibilities for the benefit of their own economies. Over the last 50 years, there have been various international trade wars, with significant damage being done to the world. Examples of these wars include the General Agreement on Trade and Tariffs, the World Trade Organization (WTO), the European Union (EU), and the North American Free Trade Agreement (NAFTA) forum.

However, rather than harmonizing the economic situation among free-trade areas that existed, nations began to protect themselves. Nations, for example, in Europe, have protected their interests by decreasing the imports of products to protect the manufacturing base in particular dramatically well developed. The economic supply chain continues to evolve. Domestic suppliers are willing and able to produce at other prices. If there were no international-trade negotiations, for example, in Europe, the significant price volatility from international trade, such as, would be produced only by domestic forces.

International Trade

It shows in this international-trade the total supply harmonization the production of domestic goods and services is reduced, which is why the supply curve is lower. This is why the domestic supply curve is lower than the foreign supply curve. The area between  $P_1$  and  $P_2$  is the consumer surplus. The area between  $P_2$  and  $P_3$  is the producer surplus. The area between  $P_3$  and  $P_1$  is the net social gain. This is the area between the domestic supply curve and the foreign supply curve.
