The Consulting Profession in Developing Countries Syed S. Kirmani, Warren C. Baum, 1992 The authors concluded that during the past two decades the number of domestic consulting firms in developing countries has increased phenomenally However the quality of their performance has not kept pace with the growth in numbers The policies and practices of government internal weaknesses in staffing and management and the lack of a supportive environment have prevented domestic consulting firms from effectively exercising the key role that they should in planning designing and implementing their countries investment programs The authors also point out that favorable opportunities for growth of the consulting profession exist but a number of constraints will have to be overcome for those to be realized The profession generally suffers from several structural weaknesses It is characterized by a small number of large firms mostly public enterprises which dominate the business and at the other end of the scale a very large number of small or medium size private firms often in a precarious position The recommended strategy for strengthening the domestic consulting is addressed to both the developing countries and the World Bank and other donors Management Skills for Project Leaders Marie-Claude

Foster, 2012-12-06 Managing projects involves being able to deal with uncertainty and complexity in the workplace but traditional management models have severe limitations under these circumstances We require new paradigms to help us make sense of the world in which we live and work This book is the result of many workshops and courses for project leaders working in a variety of settings in low and middle income countries It brings together some of the thoughts of leading management writers in an accessible form using fictitious case studies to illustrate important points. The various activities described can be used in workshops by project leaders and managers. The book is of interest to project leaders both in the governmental public and voluntary sector as well as members of non governmental organisations from a wide range of disciplines e.g. health, agriculture and community development.

Building a Body of Knowledge in Project Management in Developing Countries George Ofori, 2022-12-08. This book aims to present a state of the art account of the field of project management (PM) and present a body of knowledge (BoK) of the field for developing countries. It will discuss the current state of knowledge on project management by considering current trends and how they widen the content and scope of the field and explore the need for a special body of knowledge of project management for developing countries. It will also determine the nature of project management in developing countries, consider the contents of the field and discuss the relationships between the new field and established bodies of knowledge. Lastly, this book will consider the future of project management in developing countries and how it might influence mainstream project management. This will be an important reference book for practitioners, students, researchers and administrators.

Grassland Carbon Sequestration M. T. Abberton, Richard Theodore Conant, Caterina Batello, 2010. This book profiles 13 contributions by some of the world's most active scientists on the subject of measuring soil carbon in grassland systems and sustainable grassland management practices. While many different aspects of carbon sequestration in grasslands are covered, many gaps in our knowledge are also revealed and it is hoped that this book will promote discussion, prompt further research, contribute to develop global and national grassland strategies and contribute to sustainable production intensification.
