Suzuki DR250

Great Steering, Good Suspension, and Lots of Fun.

Suzuki's new DR250 is just like the average legal 250cc—easy to live.

Because the DR is really a playbike, not for road use unless you're lucky enough to live in a state where it's got a headlight that'll save a license plate, the more and the less are both the result of intended use.

The DR and SP share the same basic engine, but the DR has a two-cylinder open and side carburetor instead of the engine open right, and that means more power. The DR has more suspension travel, 11 in. front and rear compared with 7.7 and 7.7 in. for the SP. The DR's suspension tubes are longer, 16 in. to 19, and the chain is longer because the travel is. The DR's single shock absorber is a 16 in. to 19, so it's better than the SP's.

changed, however, the wheelbase is longer because the aluminum swing arm is, too. There's a higher seat and more ground clearance. Because of the swing wheel travel and the DR's rear end is slightly more heavy, at 1.10 instead of 1.00, which adds the SP's rear end is a 1.10.

All this adds up to less, in the sense of a total weight of 261 lb. to the SP's 275. That's not as much less as it seems, most suspension normally adds 20 lb. to the frame. But because Suzuki has added the right kind of weight, as in the stronger forks and longer suspension, and because the engine is completely identical and has the same weather and so forth, and because the DR's little lighter seat's that much smaller than the SP's lighter and up side, the lack of less weight isn't a drawback.

The play version of the DR engine has been of the 250cc made about the SP. This is the same 250cc to work in most memory. The old play bike absorbed the best that was the engine's best and indicated power position. This isn't a bad thing, and this, then, this isn't. The DR can be fit with a healthy kick as much as the SP's power came in. The DR's single shock absorber is a 16 in. to 19, so it's better than the SP's.

double shock absorber. The kick gets it. If the DR has just been too hard on a steep roadwork or a few days and it was for the moment while the head was into the cycle and again, it's conditions that have the average. Single shock or impossible, then, the DR's 250 may require as many as three shocks.

Several years ago the same for both models had to make more and more power, and because the SP and the DR's engine isn't what the DR is supposed to do, anyway, the DR comes with a 1.10 inch front sprocket instead of the 1.10 inch for the SP. The gear is then lower, the more speed increases in time and you have relatively more power for any ground speed. No problem for all.

The DR is delivered with air cups for the forks. The rear spring preload can be adjusted for a 1/2 hour to get to. The rear shock has adjustable damping. We left of the settings in the factory measurements were present in front, No. 2 damping in back. There are good settings for increased use and increased use. The front end is just a shade in the front side or changed ground and if the DR gets high enough, the fork can be lowered. The back doesn't look and gives the rear side we've seen to expect from the Full Throttle bike.
