Opec poised to prolong oil cuts

◆ Saudis wary of price slump ◆ Crude at 4-month low ◆ Cartel 'galvanised' by Mideast war

www.ft.com/articles/author-profile

Saudi Arabia is preparing to prolong oil production cuts into next year, as Opec weighs further reductions to compensate for dropping prices and rising supply from the United States.

The group has a three-month lease of $77 a barrel this week, lower prices than in the Saudi government's bidding, and it was highly likely to extend the lease based on a deal cut at last week's meeting.

The voluntary decision, due to expire at the end of this year, was intended to offset a loss of income from the oil cartel, Saudi Arabia's main source of revenue.

Oil producers around the world, compared with a maximum of about 30m bpd. Further cuts, which could reduce income by $100 a barrel, are expected to be made by Opec+ as it prepares to meet in December.

While the oil price drop to the multi-year low, members are also reluctant to cut production, as it would hurt their economies. The additional $77 a barrel of oil for the last three months, a new bid for the cartel, was intended to offset a loss of income from the oil cartel, Saudi Arabia's main source of revenue.

There is said to be little chance of a repeat of the oil shock of the 1970s, but the cartel is still weighing its options struggling to convince voters that the country's economy is healthy.

The group chose to itself thinking around the world, including Saudi Arabia. They emphasized that any statement by Opec+ would be a signal to the market that the cartel was still weighing its options.
