Along the Path to Recovery: Supporting Student Learning Motivation, Engagement and Development in Post-Pandemic Higher Education Genshu Lu, Mei Tian, Hongbiao Yin, Boliang Guo, 2025-12-12

The COVID 19 pandemic has caused unprecedented disruptions in educational systems on a global scale. It is estimated that the learning trajectories of approximately 1.5 billion students have been adversely affected, with the most vulnerable segments of the student population having suffered the most. Currently three years post outbreak, educational institutions have reopened worldwide; however, higher education is still in recovery, grappling with the long-term impact of the prolonged closures. Managing the aftermath of the pandemic calls for the implementation of innovative teaching and learning practices. Such practices should be informed by an in-depth and critical reflection on the lessons that we have learned during this crisis, aimed at supporting and reinforcing students' learning and development. In an era marked by uncertainty and constant changes, it is crucial that our higher education sector remains resilient and adaptable, ensuring that students are equipped to learn, develop, and thrive in the future world.

Recent decades have seen a significant increase in research investigating learning motivation and engagement within higher education, establishing these topics as central themes in academic inquiry. Learning motivation refers to individuals' willingness, inclination, and enthusiasm to invest time, energy, and effort in academic endeavors, facilitating learning success and achievement. Student engagement refers to the time and effort students devote to activities that are empirically linked to desired outcomes of college. Researchers have explored characteristics and determinants of learning motivation and engagement across various learning environments involving diverse student cohorts, differentiated by gender, academic disciplines, educational levels, and cultural backgrounds. Additionally, research has illuminated the influences of motivation and engagement on learning achievement, as evidenced by improved academic performance gains in general abilities and intellectual development.

Building upon the insights gained from the above-mentioned conceptual and empirical literature, the current Research Topic seeks to explore the features of and associations among students' learning motivation, engagement, and development within the post-pandemic higher education contexts. This collection intends to bring together researchers, scholars, and higher education policy makers to share insights, methodologies, and practices that highlight the importance of supporting student motivation, engagement, and development as cornerstones for the recovery of higher education. The dialogue facilitated by this collection aspires to contribute to the sustainable development of higher education in the post-COVID era.

We invite original empirical research and theoretical articles on a range of topics which include but are not limited to the following areas:

- Measurement of students' learning motivation, engagement, and development
- Features and influential factors of students' learning motivation, engagement, and development
- Relationship between students' learning motivation, engagement, and development
- Teaching pedagogies, assessment innovations, and curriculum designs that enhance learning motivation, engagement, and development
- Learning motivation, engagement, and development among vulnerable student groups including international students linguistic and ethnic minorities and students with disabilities Learning motivation engagement and development in various learning environments such as traditional classrooms online courses and informal learning spaces Uses of technologies digital tools and artificial intelligence in promoting learning motivation engagement and development Other perspectives approaches and practices for understanding students emotions psychology and behaviors which can be used to provide interventions that support learning and development

Are Chemistry Students in Nigeria Ready to Adopt Fully Remote Learning? A Study in the Context of the Changes Caused by the Covid-19 Pandemic Joshua Adetayo, 2021-12-20 Bachelor Thesis from the year 2021 in the subject Pedagogy Higher Education grade 3/8 Obafemi Awolowo University language English abstract This study is aiming at finding the uses of remote learning in the teaching and learning of chemistry in secondary schools The study is therefore interested in the effective teaching and learning of chemistry by introducing remote learning to educational system in Nigeria in order to bring about positive impact on education It also examines effectiveness of remote learning on teaching and learning can be sustained during emergency situations This study will be designed to examine the readiness of the students in adopting Four research questions were raised to guide the study What are the tools facilities available for remote learning Do the students possess the skills for remote learning Do students have access to remote learning facilities What are the challenges facing the implementation of remote learning Covid 19 pandemic forced many schools to abruptly adopt full online remote learning Such unprecedented abrupt adoption requires a degree of student readiness to ensure the success of learning delivery However the students in secondary schools have no level of awareness to adopt remote learning in Nigeria Majority of the students has no skills towards the use of remote learning and also have no access to the facilities tools in implementing remote learning Therefore this study intends to investigate the students readiness to adopt fully remote learning in the teaching and learning of Chemistry

Garden-based learning in teacher education in Germany. A mixed-method study Lena Rothe, 2023-11-08 Master's Thesis from the year 2022 in the subject Pedagogy Higher Education grade 1 Gteborg University Department of Pedagogical Curricular and Professional Studies course Education for Sustainable Development language English abstract This study focuses on achieving an in depth understanding of teacher educators and teacher students perspectives on garden based learning in the teacher education program in several universities in Germany The theoretical framework is based on three theories Garden based learning as proposed by Gaylie 2009 focuses on the role of the garden in teacher education as environment community and transformation As suggested by Meek and Tarlau 2016 critical food system education approaches food system change by helping students realise their potential in structurally transforming the food system through collective action Actor network theory analyses the human nature relationship by not privileging one over the other A mixed method approach was applied incorporating semi structured interviews with eight teacher educators and an online survey with six teacher educators and 81 teacher students from five German universities This methodological approach enabled an in depth and holistic understanding of their perspectives of the learning garden and food system education to emerge The collected data were thematically analysed and codes were generated inductively and deductively The results indicate that receiving support from various stakeholders is essential for teacher educators and that the motivation of the teacher educators is indispensable for initiating a learning garden in the teacher education programme The teacher educators that started learning gardens mostly have previous experiences related to garden based learning The teacher students and teacher educators perceived the learning garden as a place for experiential learning where the traditional student teacher relationship can be challenged According to teacher students learning outcomes such as social competency conscientiousness self efficacy and action competency could be developed in the learning garden It was found that teacher educators did not consider food system education in learning gardens to a great extent Moreover teacher students and teacher educators both perceive the learning garden as contributing to a more sustainable food system through a more sustainable diet and consumption pattern
