The God of the Witches Margaret Alice Murray, 1952-01-01 MUCH has been written of late years on the changes evolution and continuity of material culture from the Palaeolithic period down to the Roman era when written accounts of Western Europe began The movements of peoples the increase of trade the advance of civilisation have all been traced with considerable precision The late Palaeolithic period of Europe has been linked with the Capsian which is of African origin and the gulf between the Palaeolithic and Neolithic civilisations is being rapidly bridged The material side of life has received most attention for the concrete remains of Early Man are very numerous The pictorial and plastic arts of the most remote periods have also been studied and from the arts and handicrafts the mental development of the Palaeolithic and Neolithic peoples can be traced But the religion of those early times has been entirely neglected with the exception of a few references to Mother goddesses and to burial customs The student of early religion begins his subject in the early Bronze age of the Near East and totally ignores Western Europe in the Stone ages he ends his study with the introduction of Christianity as the study of that religion is known as Theology There is however a continuity of belief and ritual which can be traced from the Palaeolithic period down to modern times It is only by the anthropological method that the study of religions whether ancient or modern can be advanced The attitude of all writers towards the post Christian era in Europe especially towards the Middle Ages has been that of the ecclesiastic the historian the artist the scholar or the economist Hitherto the anthropologist has confined himself to the pre Christian periods or to the modern savage Yet medieval Europe offers to the student of Mankind one of the finest fields of research In this volume I have followed one line only of anthropological enquiry the survival of an indigenous European cult and the interaction between it and the exotic religion which finally overwhelmed it I have traced the worship of the Horned God onwards through the centuries from the Palaeolithic prototypes and I have shown that the survival of the cult was due to the survival of the races who adored that god for this belief could not have held its own against the invasions of other peoples and religions unless a stratum of the population were strong enough to keep it alive If the evidence is carefully examined it becomes clear that this stratum consisted of the descendants of the Palaeolithic Neolithic and Bronze age races The Palaeolithic people were hunters the Neolithic and Bronze age people were pastoral and agricultural Among all these races the Horned God was pre eminent for alike to hunting and pastoral folk animals were essential for life After the general introduction of agriculture the Horned God remained as a great deity and was not dethroned even by the coming of the Iron age It was not till the rise of Christianity with its fundamental doctrine that a non Christian deity was a devil that the cult of the Horned God fell into disrepute

The Discovery of Witches Montague Summers, 1928 Occult historian and scholar Montague Summers offers his narration of The Discovery of Witches an essay written by the notorious witch hunter Matthew Hopkins Working in the 1640s Hopkins was the driving force behind the execution of more than a hundred alleged witches The Discovery of Witches was designed as a guide to finding interrogating and executing suspected witches Various marks upon the body are mentioned as devilish while tests of witchcraft such as swimming whereby a woman was forcibly immersed in water were devised as a means of determining a person's affinity to illicit magic Summers offers an extensive introductory commentary describing characteristics of various cases found in historic court records from Medieval times onward Both male and female individuals were accused of possessing magical powers and were hauled before local magistrates or barons to face punishment On some occasions maladies suffered by locals or livestock were attributed to destructive curses placed by the purported magic user Such cases were frequent until
