"Vigilante" was "born" on the streets of Chicago in 1969, when the police refused to arrest the two young brothers of the slain Martin Luther King, Jr. The brothers, James Earl Ray and John Wayne Ray, were charged with the murder of the Rev. King. The police refused to arrest them because they were "too young" and "too poor" to be taken into custody. The brothers were then taken into custody by a group of young men, who were known as the "Vigilantes". The Vigilantes were a group of young men who were known for their violent and often brutal actions. They were known for their actions against the police and the government. The Vigilantes were a group of young men who were known for their violent and often brutal actions. They were known for their actions against the police and the government.

Although they disagreed by no means Thomas Jones still insisted the responsibility for the persistence of the Texas statehood legend should be assigned by the state to the state itself.
