This plate is a fine example of the Kraak style, characterized by its simple yet elegant design. The central medallion is a focal point, surrounded by a border that combines floral motifs with geometric shapes. The blue and white color scheme is classic for this type of porcelain.

This plate is another example of the Kraak style, featuring a more complex and symmetrical design than the first. The central medallion is surrounded by a wide border of intricate floral and geometric patterns. The design is executed in blue ink on a white background. The plate is shown from a slightly elevated angle, highlighting its shallow depth.

It was a type of porcelain that was easy to produce and therefore affordable. The Kraak was often used for everyday purposes, such as serving food and drink.
