A patient is on antibiotic therapy for an axillary abscess. The patient has been outside working in the yard and observes a rash everywhere that is not covered by clothing. What should the patient be told about this finding? - ANSWERwer-The patient is having photosensitivity and this can occur even with brief exposure to the sun or UV rays.

Explanation:

The patient's environment may increase the likelihood that a certain adverse effect will occur. Some antibiotics can cause the adverse effect of photosensitivity. Even brief exposure to sunlight or strong ultraviolet light can cause severe sunburn, hives, or a rash.

When a drug is discontinued, what percentage of that drug will remain in the body after three half-lives?

- ANSWERwer-12.5% Explanation:

Each half-life removes 50% of the drug stored in the body. Hence, after one half-life, the percentage of drug in the body would be 50%. After two half-lives, the percentage of drug in the body would be half of 50%, which is 25%. Consequently, after three half-lives, the percentage of drug would be 12.5%.

A patient has been brought to the emergency department (ED) following a cold water incident. Which of the following would be a potential effect of medication absorption from this clinical manifestation? -

ANSWERwer-Less than therapeutic effect

Explanation:

Patients in a cold environment may have constricted blood vessels (vasoconstriction) in the extremities, which would prevent blood flow to those areas. The circulating blood would be unable to deliver the drug to those areas, and the patient would receive little therapeutic effect from a drug intended to react with those tissues.

During which phase of study are human volunteers used to test drugs? - ANSWERwer-Phase I

Explanation:

A phase I study uses human volunteers to test a drug. During phase II, clinical investigators try out a drug with patients who have the disease that the drug is designed to treat. A phase III study involves the use
