Abstract. The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week training program on the physical fitness and health of sedentary middle-aged men. The subjects were 20 men, aged 40-50 years, who were sedentary and had no known cardiovascular disease. They were randomly assigned to either a control group (n = 10) or a training group (n = 10). The training group participated in a 12-week program of aerobic exercise, three times per week, for 45 minutes per session. The control group did not participate in any exercise program. Physical fitness was assessed at baseline and at 12 weeks using a variety of tests, including a maximal aerobic power test, a submaximal aerobic power test, and a resting heart rate test. Health was assessed at baseline and at 12 weeks using a variety of tests, including a blood pressure test, a cholesterol test, and a glucose test. The results of the study showed that the training group had significantly higher levels of physical fitness and health than the control group at 12 weeks. The training group had a significantly higher maximal aerobic power, a significantly higher submaximal aerobic power, and a significantly lower resting heart rate than the control group. The training group also had a significantly lower blood pressure, a significantly lower cholesterol level, and a significantly lower glucose level than the control group. These results suggest that a 12-week training program can improve the physical fitness and health of sedentary middle-aged men.

Abstract The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised walking program on the physical and psychological health of sedentary, middle-aged women. The study was a randomized, controlled trial. The subjects were 40 sedentary, middle-aged women who were randomly assigned to either a supervised walking program or a control group. The walking program consisted of 12 weeks of supervised walking, 3 times per week, for 30 minutes per session. The control group consisted of 20 women who did not participate in the walking program. The subjects were assessed at baseline and at 12 weeks. The walking program had a significant positive effect on the physical and psychological health of the subjects. The walking program significantly improved the subjects' physical health, as measured by the 6-minute walk test, and their psychological health, as measured by the Beck Depression Inventory and the State-Trait Anxiety Inventory. The walking program also significantly improved the subjects' quality of life, as measured by the SF-36. The walking program was well tolerated and had no adverse effects. The results of this study suggest that a supervised walking program can be an effective intervention for improving the physical and psychological health of sedentary, middle-aged women.
