SKELETAL AND MUSCULAR SYSTEMS

Dr. Mohammad

SKELETAL SYSTEM

The skeletal system is composed of bones, ligaments, and joints. It provides structural support, protects the body's internal organs, stores minerals, and acts as a lever system for movement. Bone marrow is located in the medullary cavity of bones and in the spaces of long bones. There are two types of bone marrow: red and yellow. Red bone marrow is the site of blood cell formation, while yellow bone marrow stores adipose tissue. Bone tissue is made up of bone matrix, which is a hard, mineralized substance, and osteons, which are the basic structural units of bone.

The human skeleton is divided into the axial skeleton, which includes the skull, spine, and rib cage, and the appendicular skeleton, which includes the arms and legs. The axial skeleton is made up of 26 bones, while the appendicular skeleton is made up of 54 bones. The total number of bones in the human skeleton is 206. The bones of the skull are divided into the cranial bones, which form the braincase, and the facial bones, which form the jaw and orbit. The bones of the spine are divided into the vertebrae, which form the backbone, and the sacrum, which is a triangular bone at the base of the spine. The bones of the rib cage are divided into the ribs, which protect the heart and lungs, and the sternum, which is a bone in the center of the chest. The bones of the arms and legs are divided into the humerus, radius, and ulna of the arm, and the femur, tibia, and fibula of the leg.

Diagram illustrating the skeletal system, showing the skull, spine, rib cage, and the bones of the arms and legs. The diagram is divided into four sections: Skull, Spine, Rib Cage, and Limbs. The skull is shown at the top, the spine in the center, the rib cage on the left, and the limbs on the right. The bones are labeled with their respective names.
