systems and processes that hinder a safe working environment and discover the complexities nurses face in patient care setting. Thereby gaining a better understanding of nursing knowledge levels and knowledge deficits that prohibit appropriate SPH equipment use and identification of obstacles that prohibit lifting and transferring patients safely. Evaluation methods included equipment usage and a decrease in musculoskeletal injuries related to the use of proper body mechanics and lifting techniques with SPH equipment and devices. Without the completion of this project, the future clinical would be continued incidence of manual handling injuries lost and restricted work days and continued avoidable costs to patients, nurses, and the organization.

ABSTRACT Recommendations include instituting recorded patient assessments to standardize the type of equipment and the number of staff members needed for specific handling and movement activities, as well as improved staff training. Further research is needed on the following: biomechanical forces on the wrist and knee during patient handling and movement tasks; the effect of patient weight on the risk of patient handling and movement tasks; and psychosocial stressors in addition to the physical workload of nursing staff.
