

A woman in a vibrant purple, short-sleeved, belted dress stands on a lush green golf course. She is holding the top of the dress with both hands, as if about to change. In the background, a large, white, multi-story house with a red-tiled roof and arched windows sits atop a hill, surrounded by palm trees under a clear blue sky. A single purple high-heeled shoe lies on the grass near her feet.

Just Like Me, Only Better Carol Snow, 2010 After a messy painful divorce Veronica takes a job as a celebrity double for starlet Haley Rush and gets to drive the actress s car wear her clothes and have fun with her boyfriend maybe a little too much fun Original For Carol Snow, 2000 Praise for Carol Snow s work Many feminist thinkers and artists have tried in the last decade to understand the relation between gender and language language and violence violence and art Carol Snow frames these issues at the roots of perception This is a work of difficult beauty Robert Hass University of California Berkeley and former Poet Laureate of the United States Carol Snow teaches us among other things how fiercely syntax can be used as an instrument for self scrutiny and how brutally self transforming a verbal action can be when undertaken in good faith For although it is the relationship between aesthetics and politics which is most apparent in this work it is the sustained and almost desperate personal honesty which surprises and moves me Jorie Graham University of Iowa Not only perception informs the poems but a conceptual daring capable of posing sunlight as wind or gratitude as the condition of things An elegiac and at times erotizing regard for the complexity of resemblances and for what resemblance leaves unstated untouched makes Artist and Model a deeply affecting book Nathaniel Mackey University of California Santa Cruz
