The Governance of Climate Change Adaptation in Developing Countries Tina Peissker, 2012-11-28 Diploma Thesis from the year 2011 in the subject Politics Environmental Policy grade 1 3 University of Potsdam Chair of International Politics language English abstract The prospects that global climate change will have adverse effects on human societies opened up a discourse about how adaptation should be managed In order to finance adaptation measures the parties of the Kyoto Protocol recently established the Adaptation Fund in 2007 In view of the limited resources that are available for adaptation scales for the prioritization of countries according to their suspected vulnerability have been developed in the literature Indicators of vulnerability highlighted within this literature only reflect the indicators of human development and therefore fail to capture the complex structures of vulnerability The collective learning approach assumes that vulnerability can be significantly decreased when governance systems adapt to external changes through collective learning processes The present thesis connects to this notion and therefore assesses the influence of collective learning processes on the vulnerability of the Bangladeshi and Pakistani society towards flood hazards It does so in order to find a determinant of vulnerability that is able to capture its complexity Following a case study comparison that is based on a systematic research on primary and secondary literature this study reconfirms that vulnerability can substantially be decreased in the presence of collective learning processes Accounting in Central and Eastern Europe Catalin Albu, Razvan Mustapa, 2013-12-05 This volume examines the accounting issues within Central and Eastern Europe looking back to the fall of communism 1980s 90s and its effect on the countries accounting and business models Pharmacotherapy A Pathophysiologic Approach 9/E Joseph T. Incorporating Safety Into the Regional Planning Process in Virginia John Sanders Miller, 2010 The Federal Highway Administration argues that one way to reduce substantially the annual 230 billion national societal cost of motor vehicle crashes is to incorporate safety directly into the long range transportation planning process Because much of this planning in Virginia is conducted by metropolitan planning organizations MPOs and planning district commissions PDCs it is appropriate to determine ways in which the Virginia Department of Transportation VDOT which generally is responsible for roadway safety may work with these organizations to integrate safety and planning A survey of Virginia MPOs PDCs conducted in this study revealed a healthy interest in such integration 83% of respondents included safety in their planning goals and objectives 61% involved citizens in safety planning and 86% of those answering the particular question indicated safety is a factor or in the case of one respondent the only factor used to prioritize projects in the long range plan The survey also identified several barriers to such integration Although respondents cited a lack of dedicated safety funding as the largest obstacle other barriers cited included the difficulty of obtaining of crash data and a lack of adequate training for staff in areas such as geometric design crash data acquisition and human factors Further 44% of respondents who answered the particular question noted that before after studies are not conducted to determine the efficacy of safety related projects Accordingly this study developed a Virginia specific resource guide that VDOT district planning staff MPOs and PDCs can use to enhance the integration of safety into the planning process This report Volume I describes the process used to develop the guide the guide itself is provided in Volume II The guide promotes the incorporation of safety into the planning process by providing numerous specific examples rather than by exhorting agencies to perform such coordination Virginia is a diverse state composed of urban suburban and rural regions with varying degrees of reliance on local and state crash data systems As a consequence the opportunities to integrate safety and planning are themselves diverse as reflected in the guide Many solutions presented in the guide are feasible in some situations but not in others For example widening substandard high speed travel lanes may be productive in a rural area whereas an urban location might benefit from a reduction in the number of vehicle lanes and the addition of a bicycle path Further the guide identifies 16 funding sources for safety related projects given that no funding source has universal applicability By necessity therefore of the diverse examples provided in the guide only some may be suitable for a given region
