

The Circular Flow of Resources, Goods, Service and Money Payments

One way of describing the circular operations of a nation economy is through a circular flow diagram such as the one on this page. This diagram presents a highly simplified overview of the national economy.

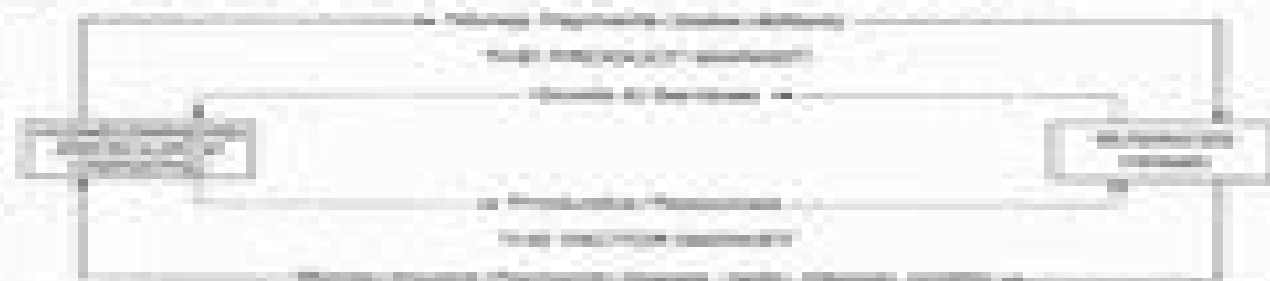

Households (consumers) provide resources (labor) to the owners of the land, labor and capital. In return, business firms in exchange for money, provide payments in the form of wages and salaries, interest and profits. Owners of the resources in turn use these financial payments to purchase the finished goods and services supplied by the business firms. Business firms then use the proceeds from these sales to pay the resources owners for the services the firms receive by supplying the resources. This is how the circular flow of resources, goods and services, and money income payments is established and maintained.

Payments to the lower part of the diagram, which is sometimes called the factor market, represent income to the resource owners who sell productive resources. The flows enter payments (input) in only to the business firms that buy productive services.

Payments (output) to the upper part of the diagram reflect payments for product markets (output) in only to the resource owners who first goods and services. For these same payments (output) is received by the business firms that sell goods and services.

The important point to emphasize is that all of the money payments shown in the diagram are flow payments (as distinguished from payments in a lump sum). In a system of representative markets, every price depends on a flow rather than on a static price. For example, the price business owners are willing to pay for finished goods and services depends on the price business firms receive for the sale of these resources. The price of resources, in turn, depends on how much business firms are willing to pay for the services the resource owners provide. The diagram shows that payments (output) to resource owners flow out from the business firms, but money (input) flows from the resource owners to the business firms.
