

Barriers to Trade

The harmonization of national export and import policies, free trade is a system wherein all the goods of governments have the same international trade possibilities for the benefit of their own economies. Once the free trade system has been achieved, many trade barriers, such as tariff regulations, are being torn apart. Examples of these barriers include the General Agreement on Trade and Tariffs, the World Trade Organization (WTO), the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development (OECD), and the North Atlantic Trade Agreement (NAFTA) forum.

However, before the harmonization, the economic situation varies for some goods that cannot easily provide for perfect free trade. In Figure 10, a free trade line represents the demand for the domestic economy, the domestic supply curve represents the domestic supply, and the domestic supply curve represents the domestic supply. The domestic supply curve is a horizontal line, the domestic supply curve is a horizontal line, and the domestic supply curve is a horizontal line. If there were no international trade, the domestic supply curve would be a horizontal line, the domestic supply curve would be a horizontal line, and the domestic supply curve would be a horizontal line.

International Trade

It shows in free international trade the total supply curve represents the production of domestic goods and services, the domestic supply curve represents the domestic supply, and the domestic supply curve represents the domestic supply. The domestic supply curve is a horizontal line, the domestic supply curve is a horizontal line, and the domestic supply curve is a horizontal line. If there were no international trade, the domestic supply curve would be a horizontal line, the domestic supply curve would be a horizontal line, and the domestic supply curve would be a horizontal line.
