Introduction

There are four market types namely; monopoly, monopolistic competition, pure competition and oligopolistic markets (Peterson 1977). Pure monopolies and pure competition firms represent the two extremes of competition which is not easy to find in practice. The following is a review of an example of an organisation in Maryland operating in a pure competition market and one in a pure monopoly market.

Example of a firm operating in a pure competition market

Pure competitors such as retail operations however have no control of the market and thus no control over prices (O'Sullivan, Sheffrin, and Perez 2009). A firm in such a market could sell any quantities of its products without influencing the market prices.

It is quite difficult to get markets that are purely competitive where buyers have full knowledge, there are no barriers of entry and exit, buyers can easily switch from one seller to the other, and where there are a large number of buyers and sellers. However, retailers of agricultural commodities could provide a good example of a pure competition market.

Some traders have sought to differentiate their farm produce thus reducing price competition in this market. For instance, since consumers are becoming more health conscious, traders of farm produce are venturing into natural foods in place of GMOs whereas packaging is also gaining prominence as a differentiation tool.

Market for agricultural products is set to change resulting to a decline in price competition. Traders are seeking other forms of competitive fronts such as packaging and focus of healthy products. Therefore, the market is set to convert into monopolistic competition where differentiation is critical. Suppliers should therefore brace themselves for non-price competition.

Example of a pure monopoly

A pure monopoly is a market structure in which there is only one seller of a product or service. The monopolist has no close substitutes and no competitors. The monopolist is a price maker, meaning that it can set the price of its product or service without being constrained by the market.

There are several characteristics of a pure monopoly. First, there is only one seller of the product or service. Second, the product or service is unique and has no close substitutes. Third, the monopolist has no competitors. Fourth, the monopolist is a price maker.

There are several examples of pure monopolies. One example is a utility company, which is the only provider of electricity or gas in a particular area. Another example is a patent holder, who has the exclusive right to produce and sell a particular product.

Pure monopolies are rare in the real world. Most markets are either monopolistic competition or oligopoly. However, pure monopolies do exist in certain industries, such as utilities and patents.

The main goal of a pure monopoly is to maximize profit. The monopolist does this by setting a price that is higher than the marginal cost of production. This results in a deadweight loss to society, as some potential buyers are unable to purchase the product or service.

Conclusion

The study of microeconomics provides a framework for understanding the behavior of individual firms and the overall economy. The analysis of pure competition and pure monopoly markets highlights the importance of market structure in determining the behavior of firms and the welfare of society.

of scientific studies which can assist in gaining new insights explaining differences between results of similar studies or determine useful directions of research In this book we focus on the use of meta analysis in environmental economics and related fields of study The first part of the book covers the overall meta approach methodology for social sciences and economics in particular This is followed by technical and non technical discussions of statistical and rough set techniques for analysis At appropriate places this is supplemented with reviews of applications in environmental economics and related fields In the second part of the book a number of case studies show different aspects of the application of meta analysis The research areas considered include among others tourism multipliers air pollution valuation risk and value of life pesticide price policy travel time savings and transport externality and policy issues The benefits of the appropriate application of meta analysis in environmental economics are a better use of existing information and knowledge removal of some of the
