Xhosa idioms and proverbs referring to plants

African culture and language diversity remain closely linked to biodiversity

"Converging with the ecological extinction crisis, the planet has been experiencing a severe erosion of the diversity of human cultures and languages, reducing the pool of knowledge, behaviors and values from which individual communities and humanity at large can draw to respond to social and environmental stresses"

With a land surface area of 1.1 million km², representing just 1% of the earth's total land surface, South Africa is home to almost 10% of the world's known bird, fish and plant species, and over 6% of the world's mammal and reptile species. Not only do we claim to have the third-highest level of biodiversity in the world, we call ourselves the 'Rainbow Nation', a title that reflects the country's rich cultural diversity.

Recent research suggests a strong correlation between the geographical distribution of biological 'megadiversity' and that of cultural and linguistic diversity with a trend towards increasing linguistic diversity in areas of increasing plant diversity and vice versa. It is possible that biological and cultural-linguistic diversity may be related through co-evolution and that the causes and consequences of declining biodiversity may be linked to those threatening the diversity of human cultures and languages. It is estimated that half the people in the world now use one of eight global languages. Experts say 234 African languages have already disappeared and that 32% of the endangered languages on earth are African. Yet, by and large, the destruction of both natural and cultural habitats continues unabated. The loss of languages, cultural practices and indigenous ecological knowledge all reflect the breakdown in the relationship between humans and their environment. It has been suggested that solutions for the sustainability of both cultural heritage and the environment require recognition of the inextricable link between cultural diversity and biological diversity.

Xhosa idioms and proverbs

While documenting folk-ecology over almost ten years we have collected a number of Xhosa proverbs (amaqhalo) and idioms (izaci) referring to plants. The wording and interpretation of these differ widely but nevertheless illustrate the complex relationship between culture/society and nature/environment. It is said that cultures and languages are defined by the natural environment in which they evolve, expressed here by the use of plant names in nuances of the Xhosa language.

"We hope that by presenting these in written form they may be kept alive for future generations of the 'Rainbow Nation'."
