

Unit 6, Lesson 3B

Activity 1

Understanding Aggregate Demand

Aggregate demand shows the total quantity of goods and services that consumers, businesses, and the government want to purchase in the economy. It represents all the demand in the economy.

Consumers demand consumer goods and services. Businesses demand capital goods and services. The government demand government goods and services. It all adds up to the aggregate demand in the economy.

The demand curve shows the "what-ifs" of aggregate demand. It shows the quantity of goods and services that consumers, businesses, and the government want to purchase at the various prices.

What if the price of goods and services falls? Then consumers, businesses, and the government want to purchase more goods and services. The aggregate demand curve shifts to the right.

Activity 2: Aggregate Demand

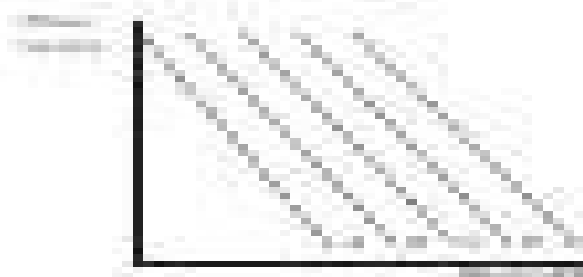

What is aggregate demand? Aggregate demand is the total quantity of goods and services that consumers, businesses, and the government want to purchase in the economy. It is the sum of the demand for consumer goods and services, the demand for capital goods and services, and the demand for government goods and services. The aggregate demand curve shows the quantity of goods and services that consumers, businesses, and the government want to purchase at the various prices. The aggregate demand curve shifts to the right when the price of goods and services falls, when the income of consumers, businesses, and the government rises, when the price of new capital goods rises, and when the price of government goods rises.

What if the price of goods and services falls? Then consumers, businesses, and the government want to purchase more goods and services. The aggregate demand curve shifts to the right.

What if the income of consumers, businesses, and the government rises? Then consumers, businesses, and the government want to purchase more goods and services. The aggregate demand curve shifts to the right.
