

Nutritional Milestones

The First Human Diet:

Early humans utilized a hunter-gatherer-horticulturist lifestyle that provided them with nutrient-dense, seasonal, locally sourced foods. When foods were processed, the techniques used increased the nutrient content of the foods. All early societies were omnivores, however their diets varied based on where they lived and what foods were available to them. This lifestyle prevented many chronic illnesses we see today.

Biologically speaking we are still very similar to our ancestors when looking at our nutritional needs, however there have been some milestones that have greatly affected the foods we eat, how we eat, and our overall health.
