The National Osteoporosis Foundation (NOF) contracted with the independent actuarial firm, Milliman, to conduct an analysis of the the clinical and cost burden of fractures caused by osteoporosis. SUMMARY: 54 million Americans age 50 and over either already have or are at risk of osteoporosis. Osteoporosis-related bone fractures are responsible for more hospitalizations than heart attacks, strokes and breast cancer combined. As the nation ages, this problem will continue to worsen, exacting a major economic and human toll on Medicare beneficiaries, their caregivers and taxpayers. Yet the problem is rarely a focus of public discussion or policymaker priority. Preventing secondary osteoporotic fractures may result in significant Medicare savings while at the same time, reduce suffering for older Americans.

¹ The additional cost in the 180-day period following a second fracture to Medicare for the 307,000 beneficiaries who suffered a second fracture in the 2-3 years after an initial osteoporotic fracture and survived for at least 180 days after the second fracture.

² Evidence: Harman, et al. 2012 (link) 10/12

³ The report concludes that reducing between 9 percent and 30 percent of these "secondary" fractures in 2015 could have reduced Medicare fee-for-service (FFS) spending by $100 million to $1.2 billion over a following period that lasted up to 2 to 3 years after a new osteoporotic fracture.
