Creating the Cultural Tour Clay M. Schouest, 2001 This project explores how photographs within a travel publication of Turkey are intended for mass visual consumption The photographs within Lonely Planet Turkey are sights of sites they are cultural images that supposedly represent the surrounding reality of a place Through the publication's photographs of others I will examine how the guide manages to establish its visual realism It is hoped that such a study will enable the viewer to examine the power and ideology of what is represented with the aid of a critical eye Such awareness enables the viewer to question the historical political and economic context of photographs that deal directly with the representation of a culture
