Impact of Recession on Foreign Institutional Investment

The Most immediate effect of the crisis on India has been an outflow of foreign institutional investment from the equity market. Foreign Institutional Investment which need to retrench assets in order to cover losses in their home countries and were seeking havens of safety in an uncertain environment, have become major sellers in Indian markets. As FIIs pull out their money from the stock market the large likely to be the export and small and marginal enterprises that contribute significantly to employment generation. In 2007-08, net foreign Institutional Investment (FIIs) inflows into India amounted to $16040 million. But in April-November 2008 it was negative to $8857 million.
