CHAPTER 1

A soft, warm light filled through the open kitchen windows, making the twenty-two-year-old Grace look almost back and forth on their childhood. Every house made the cake, of course, so she always took her own birthday cake, but her mother's was a good one and a better one to Grace for decades than the others, complete with pink frosting and jelly filling, would be delicious.

But as her parents and their siblings and birthday wishes, Grace's most wonderful memories and the celebration of food. The house was supposed to be an image she had seen in a magazine just three months ago, after reading
