thousands of active duty personnel have immigrant family members who do not have legal status for one reason or another. For these family members, deportation is always a threat. Some of our military service members worry not only about surviving their deployment but also about the prospect of their spouse or other family member being deported during deployment or after they return home. In some cases, veterans who did not naturalize during enlistment or after enlistment have been deported. Just as with past generations, Americans are and will be defended by immigrants. It is more important than ever to understand the history of immigrants' military service, the legal barriers to the enlistment of skilled foreign-born residents, and what immigration policy changes are necessary to keep our nation secure.
