

Worked example

Give one difference between a tendon and a ligament. (1)

Answer: A tendon joins a muscle to a bone whereas a ligament joins bone to bone.

The answer gives a clear difference by using the word 'whereas'. You could also say that one has provided a difference. In this example the difference is one of location and you could have said that tendons – for example, a biceps muscle – have to move when the bones connected between a forearm and upper arm joint, having for difference a 'passive' system of anatomy and physiology and will usually be described one mark for each correct half of the answer.

Answering extended answer questions

Example 1:

Outline the path of a red blood cell from the renal vein to the renal artery. Include the location of the site of oxygen uptake by the red blood cell and its delivery of oxygen to body cells. (5)

To answer this question you need to know the pattern of the circulatory system including the route through the heart and basic information on the respiratory system.

Answer:

An excellent answer will state that the renal vein contains deoxygenated blood and simply state that this vein is going back to the heart called the renal vein. The renal vein enters the right atrium and the blood travels into the right ventricle to be pumped out during a heart contraction into the pulmonary artery to the lungs. Here the red blood cell will pick up dissolved oxygen and travel to the left atrium of the heart and the pulmonary vein. Blood travels from the atrium into the left ventricle and during contraction it is pumped out into the aorta and then this blood where it will deliver oxygen to the body tissues.

A weak answer will only simply say the renal vein is back and may not understand nature of some blood vessels. The uptake and delivery of oxygen will be vague.

Look carefully at this that question is not just for how many words it takes to be included in your answer.

Example 2:

Explain how the volume of water in the human body is kept within a narrow range. (10)

To answer this question you will need to know the homeostatic control of fluid (water) involving the nervous system, the renal system and the endocrine system.

Answer:

An excellent answer will look at both increased blood volume through salt drinking and drinking fluid increasing the osmoregulation and the hormonal processes by which the kidneys that is increased salt in urine otherwise the water is lost from the body by the sweating and a salt complex that would cause an imbalance by the kidneys through ADH secreted by the brain to concentrate.

A weak answer might just say only the salt balance the water being removed by the kidneys to state that they have the levels of the hormone but not the role of the sympathetic and parasympathetic or where ADH acts in the kidneys.
