Course description:

In MUS 100, students will develop vocabularies for talking and thinking about music across the multiple domains of its theory, history, geography, and media. Students in MUS 100 will think about music in a way that the twenty-first century increasingly demands: pluralistically, with an array of terms and conceptual frameworks. By the end of the course, students will have gained a wide variety of tools for engaging with music aurally and conceptually, both as they encounter it in everyday life, and in concert or close-listening scenarios.

Course Objectives:

Students who successfully complete this course will:

- Develop a vocabulary for talking about music's sonic features
- Gain familiarity with notational practices and possibilities
- Think critically about music's relationship with history
- Develop strategies for engaging with music scholarship.

Course Materials:

All scores, readings, and recordings will be available on Moodle. On Fridays, I will post an announcement on Moodle with a detailed list of assignments for the following week. After each class session, I will also post slides from lecture and a short Class Plan on Moodle. This will include a list of relevant terminology covered that day, and any links, readings, and media for the day. This is your go-to resource for periodic review.
