

- Condensation polymerisation is the joining of two monomers with the elimination of small molecule such as water or HCl
 - Condensation polymerisation requires monomers with two different functional groups
 - A functional group on one monomer unit bonds to a different functional group on another monomer unit.
- Polyesters and polyamides are common condensation polymers.

Polyesters

- An ester can be made from a carboxylic acid and an alcohol
- In forming the polyester, monomer units are bonded together by ester linkages and water is eliminated
- For polyester, the monomers have a carboxyl group and a hydroxyl group.
 - There are two common types of polyester:
 - Polyesters made by reacting two different types of monomer units:
 - One monomer is a dicarboxylic acid with two -COOH groups
 - The other monomer is a diol with two -OH groups
 - Polyesters made by reacting just one type of monomer unit containing -COOH and -OH groups

Polyesters from two types of monomer units

- During condensation polymerisation:
 - A bond forms between a hydroxyl group on the diol and a carboxyl group on a dicarboxylic acid
 - An ester linkage forms and water is eliminated.
