Abstract. Staphylococcus aureus strains belonging to community-associated (CA) and hospital-associated (HA) lineages were examined by pulsed-field gel electrophoresis (PFGE) and compared with strains isolated from patients with skin and soft tissue infections (SSTIs) in a tertiary care hospital. The results of the PFGE analysis showed that the majority of the strains were of the CA lineage, and that the HA lineage was represented by a small number of strains. The results of the PFGE analysis also showed that the majority of the strains were of the CA lineage, and that the HA lineage was represented by a small number of strains.

These approaches to study consumer behaviour are in themselves not new, but their combination together in digital media, however, presents a new paradigm of research in consumer behaviour studies as well as new digital marketing tactics that are important to us. It is difficult to see how we can ignore digital media in our study of the consumer and his behaviour and, indeed, understand him. Both past and present marketing approaches can be applied to digital marketing and vice versa, but we cannot really ignore digital marketing in our study of the consumer.
