MARKET EQUILIBRIUM • CHAPTER 4

each price, we get the quantity supplied for the entire market by multiplying the quantity supplied by the typical firm (from the individual supply curve) by 100. At a price of $7, each firm produces 40 units, so the market supply is 4,000 units (see Panel A). If the price increases to $8, each firm increases production to 45 units (see Panel B), so the market supply is 4,500 units (see Panel B).

What happens if there are no identical but instead have different individual supply curves? To compare the market supply in this case, we add the quantities supplied by the hundreds of firms in the market. The assumption that there are identical numbers of firms is easier to derive the market supply curve from the supply curve of the typical firm, but it does not change the analysis.

Market Equilibrium

In Panel A, the upward-sloping curve represents the demand curve (supply curve is omitted). It shows the price for a certain price of 7. The quantity supplied by the market is 4,000 units, so the market price is 7. The 7 price would be enough to get the market supply, so the market price is 7, and it is the price that all firms receive.

- At the market level, the quantity of the product supplied equals the quantity demanded. The demand curve indicates the demand for market supply curve at a price of 7 and a quantity of 4,000 units per minute (Panel A).
- The typical firm in the market maximizes its profit, given the market price. Given the market price of 7, each of the 100 firms maximizes profit by producing 40 units per minute (Panel B).
