

Music as a life passion

When you really like something, you often don't give it a second thought. Without you realizing, it becomes a staple in your life – like food or water, and you can't imagine its absence. It's a part of you. That's how music is to me.

I've learned Indian Classical music for around 8 years. I have also been a regular student at my school choir for all my school life. Initially, I used to go to music classes because my parents asked me to. Also because I liked playing Badminton with my friends after the class. So when academics got overwhelming, it wasn't difficult for me to find an excuse to stop learning music. Despite this not-really-interested phase of learning music, thanks to good teachers and my inbuilt need to excel at what I do, I learned quite a lot. I cleared my examination at the junior diploma level and subsequently passed the third year (first part of Diploma) with distinction.

Music was already becoming a part of my life. So when I stopped practicing music, there was a hole. That's when the transition happened. That's when I knew I needed music in my life. From then on, I went back to music with an extra vigor. Soon, I discovered my fondness for the instrument, Synthesizer. I never had a formal training for playing the keyboard yet past lessons in classical music helped me grasp the notes and chords essential for playing the instrument.

Music moved on from being a small part of my life to a passion. The first thing that comes to my mind when I think of why I'm passionate about music is: music is relaxing to me. It takes me to a whole new world where there are no worries or assignments or deadlines! It holds my attention and a probably riveting show I can't remember to

Explorations - 20 Essays In and Around Music, Sound, Literature and Places Michael Regan, 2012-11-21 Essay from the year 2012 in the subject Musicology Miscellaneous University of West London language English abstract The essays are divided into three sections those featuring some of the composers whose music has been of particular significance to me then a group of pieces on compositional matters including aspects of style and form such as minimalism improvisation and repeats and finally a miscellaneous group on diverse topics including education the sonic environment and the meaning of music and art in general The final essay entitled Explorations is a summary of those many enthusiasms that I have indulged in over the years but actually all the essays are attempts at sharing my love of music sound literature and places without in any way pretending to be authoritative In fact I discovered that the more I try to write about a subject dear to me the more aware I am of not knowing nearly enough about it Therefore I plead guilty if it is levelled at these pages that enthusiasm outpaces concrete knowledge although I would hope that it could not be said of them as John Butler Yeats once said of his more famous son's opinions that they are drawn from the depths of my ignorance I have tried not to theorise feeling that there are altogether too many theories in the world Some of these items celebrate some explore They are simply the results of numerous interests which I just do not want to keep to myself any longer Whether this is wise or not let the reader judge The least I can hope is that I might stimulate others to explore some of the subjects which have inspired and indeed kept me going mentally that is through six decades
