government But even as they were creating a new life for themselves the refugees were longing for their homeland El Salvador After long and complex negotiations with the governments of Honduras and El Salvador the refugees repatriated literally picking up their community and crossing over the border There in early 1990 they established a new city named for one of the slain Jesuit priests Dr Segundo Montes where they hope to maintain their communitarian style of work and organization This compelling story is illustrated with over one hundred superb photographs of the refugees and their community The pictures and text work together inspiring us to believe that people can sustain hope and can work to improve the conditions of their lives even in the worst circumstances     Israel's Messenger ,1926     The New Jerome Biblical Commentary Raymond Edward Brown,Joseph A.
