The Language of COVID-19 Conspiracy Theories. A Semantic Approach Lisa Thöne, 2024-05-28 Seminar paper from the year 2021 in the subject English Language and Literature Studies Linguistics grade 1.0 University of Paderborn Institut für Anglistik und Amerikanistik course Semantics language English abstract This paper examines the language of COVID 19 conspiracy theories through analysing different sense relations framings and word combinations blendings The paper unveils linguistic tactics used to spread misinformation and provides crucial insights for combating misinformation and promoting critical thinking To dissolve and understand the language of conspiracy it is useful to first look at single units of language that mean something words and their semantic relations within the English language and to the world OALD Existing research recognises that conspiracy language is distinct and coins new linguistic structures with new senses which can then insert influence on the recipients which does not serve their cognitive well being An example of this would be the extensive use of the word truth in conspiracy theories attached to a narrow belief in the sense of the only belief that should be accepted otherwise a person will suffer If someone is mentally labile and believes that truth only refers to that certain narrow belief the person is likely to be manipulated
