Singer, 2020-09-10 The development of a field or an area of inquiry is often marked by changes in measurement techniques shifts in analytic emphasis and disputes over the best ways of doing research In many areas of psychology a number of issues have characterized methodological evolution of the discipline including questions regarding context and reductionism or laboratory versus field research For some of the newer areas in psychology such as environment or health psychology this is not an issue of either or Although there has been some debate about these trade offs it is generally regarded by people in this field that some combination of the two approaches is essential Depending on the question being studied this balance may change However the questions asked are less likely to inquire which way is better and concentrate on how both may be used This observation serves to illustrate the fact that different research endeavours have different methodological issues Originally published in 1985 this volume explores some of the issues characterizing work on health environment and behavior The Environmental Psychology of Prisons and Jails Richard E. Wener, 2012-06-18 This book distils thirty years of research on the impacts of jail and prison environments The research program began with evaluations of new jails that were created by the US Bureau of Prisons which had a novel design intended to provide a non traditional and safe environment for pre trial inmates and documented the stunning success of these jails in reducing tension and violence This book uses assessments of this new model as a basis for considering the nature of environment and behavior in correctional settings and more broadly in all human settings It provides a critical review of research on jail environments and of specific issues critical to the way they are experienced and places them in historical and theoretical context It presents a contextual model for the way environment influences the chance of violence
