Abstract—The effectiveness of the 1990 U.S. Food and Drug Administration (FDA) regulation of the use of the term "diet" in the labeling of foods was evaluated. The regulation requires that foods labeled "diet" must contain no more than 5% of the calories from fat. The regulation was evaluated using data from the 1990 National Health and Nutrition Examination Survey (NHANES). The results show that the regulation was effective in reducing the number of foods labeled "diet" that were high in fat. However, the regulation was not effective in reducing the number of foods labeled "diet" that were high in calories. The results also show that the regulation was not effective in reducing the number of foods labeled "diet" that were high in sugar. The results suggest that the regulation was not effective in reducing the overall fat content of foods labeled "diet".
