QUESTION

My wife and I recently had a visit with our 10-year-old son and we were surprised to find out that he had been diagnosed with autism. We were told that he had been diagnosed with autism because he was not talking and he was not playing with other children. We were told that he had been diagnosed with autism because he was not talking and he was not playing with other children.

ANSWER

Autism is a complex disorder that affects the brain and the way it processes information. It is a developmental disability that is usually diagnosed in early childhood. The symptoms of autism can vary widely, but they often include difficulties with communication, social interaction, and repetitive behaviors. In your son's case, the fact that he was not talking and not playing with other children were likely signs that led to his diagnosis. It's important to remember that every child with autism is unique, and there is no one-size-fits-all approach to treatment. Early intervention is key, so it's great that you're seeking help for him. A team of professionals, including a speech therapist, occupational therapist, and behavioral specialist, can work together to help your son develop the skills he needs to thrive. With the right support, children with autism can lead happy and successful lives.

Abstract The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised walking program on the physical and psychological health of sedentary, middle-aged women. The study was a randomized, controlled trial. The subjects were 40 sedentary, middle-aged women who were randomly assigned to either a supervised walking program or a control group. The walking program consisted of 12 weeks of supervised walking, 3 times per week, for 30 minutes per session. The control group consisted of 20 women who did not participate in the walking program. The physical and psychological health of the subjects was assessed at baseline and at 12 weeks. The walking program had a significant positive effect on the physical and psychological health of the subjects. The walking program significantly improved the subjects' physical health, as measured by the 6-minute walk test, and their psychological health, as measured by the Beck Depression Inventory and the State-Trait Anxiety Inventory. The walking program also significantly improved the subjects' quality of life, as measured by the SF-36. The walking program was well tolerated and had no adverse effects. The results of this study suggest that a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised walking program can improve the physical and psychological health of sedentary, middle-aged women.

Example 4: non-invertible

Figure 4.10 shows the non-invertible case. The data is non-stationary, and the ADF test statistic is  $-1.95$ , which is greater than the critical value of  $-2.86$ . Therefore, we fail to reject the null hypothesis of a unit root, and the data is non-invertible.

Example 5: stationary

Figure 4.11 shows the stationary case. The data is stationary, and the ADF test statistic is  $-3.12$ , which is less than the critical value of  $-2.86$ . Therefore, we reject the null hypothesis of a unit root, and the data is stationary.
