

Another difference relates to a cashless system. Cali has not full adopted a cashless system. While the ideal society has a cashless system for easy transactions in many sectors, most Cali sectors have not done enough to promote a paperless society. Except for banks, other industries lag behind.

Later in my life, I intend to settle in Geneva, Switzerland. Geneva's population is not as diverse in population as my ideal community holds. However, the population has attributes that are described in my ideal community. For instance, people in the country are hospitable and friendly. They have residential bonds and a culture that focuses of healthy relationships between people and especially neighbors.

Geneva is very advanced in technological systems, connectivity, transport networks and industrial developments. The ease in communication is commendable. There are safe means of fast and cheap transport as well as highly efficient industries that produce high quality goods.

This makes the town appropriate to live in and meet the desired standards of life for different people. My ideal community also imposes this kind of attribute in a town. Therefore, Geneva strongly conforms to technological, industrial and communication standards as those found in my ideal community.

Security in Geneva is top notch. It is safe to do business and run errands at any time of the night. This eliminates worries on the life of people. On this aspect, the community is secure as it is recommended in my ideal community.

Much has been done to improve services through a cashless system. Though it is not fully adopted, it is highly spread in diverse industries. The most notable sector that employs the cashless system is the famed financial sector of the country.
