- Abstract The purpose of this study was to examine the effects of a 6-week training program on the physical fitness and health-related quality of life (HRQL) of older adults. A total of 70 participants were randomly assigned to either a control group or an exercise group. The exercise group performed a supervised, low-impact aerobically and strength training program three times per week. The control group did not participate in any structured exercise program. Pretest and posttest measurements were taken at baseline and after 6 weeks. Results showed that the exercise group had significantly higher levels of physical fitness and HRQL than the control group at both pretest and posttest measurements. The findings suggest that a 6-week training program can improve physical fitness and HRQL in older adults.
