Care Delivery Strategies: RN, LPN & Nursing Assistant Roles - Research Paper Essay

Introduction

Care delivery strategies are important ways to promote good leadership and management of patients in a given unit. Care delivery is given by a team of registered nurses, licensed practicing nurses and nursing assistants in which every member of the team plays their specific roles in order to meet their patients' demands and needs.

Functional Roles

The first Registered Nurses Role will include the following; Admit and discharge patients, maintain updated and accurate documentation for each patient, develop a wellness care plan for each patient, timely assess, monitor and manage all the ten patients in the unit and intervene in patient transfer for bed capacity management.

The second Registered Nurse role will include the following; administer IVs and monitor patient medications, perform basic life support procedures, insert and manage catheters, take patient vital signs, care for wounds and address any abnormalities.

The licensed practical nurses' role will include the following; help the RN with administering medication, take the necessary vital signs of the patient, update and chart medical records for patients, monitor patients, perform emergency CPR and collect various specimens such as blood and urine for lab testing (Johnson, Cowles & Simmens 1996)

Nursing Assistant's main role will be to help maintain the hygiene of the working area, help the patients with their daily activities such as toileting, changing bedding and bed positions and also help in wound care of the patients in the subacute unit.

Team Nursing

The first registered nurses' role will be the management of the available patients, take, update medical records of patients, and continuously keep in contact with the other team members present. Proper management will ease the workflow and ensure that every patient is attended to (Sahlsten, Larsson, Sjostrom & Plos 2009).

The second registered nurses' role will be to continuously treat patients that require round the clock treatment before gaining stability or being able to be transferred to recovery rooms. They will perform tasks like feeding, for patients who use tubes, change catheters, change IVs, give medication and perform any necessary procedures that the patient may need in collaboration with the rest of the physicians (Jinks & Hope 2000).

In team nursing, the LPN will be working round the clock to ensure that the basic needs of all the
