

Developmental Characteristics

During the preschool years, children's cognitive abilities develop rapidly. They begin to understand the concept of conservation, which is the understanding that the amount of a substance remains the same even if its shape or appearance changes. For example, a child may understand that a glass of water is still the same amount of water even if it is poured into a different shaped glass.

Children also begin to develop a sense of time and sequence. They may start to understand the difference between "before" and "after" and may begin to sequence events, such as "first, then, last." This helps them to understand the flow of time and the order of events in their lives.

Preschool children also develop a sense of self and a sense of identity. They begin to understand that they are a unique individual with their own thoughts, feelings, and experiences. This helps them to develop a sense of self-worth and confidence.

Children also begin to develop social skills and a sense of empathy. They learn to share, take turns, and cooperate with others. They also begin to understand the feelings of others and may start to show empathy for those who are sad or in need.

Preschool children also develop a sense of curiosity and a love of learning. They are naturally curious about the world around them and want to know more about everything they see and hear. This helps them to develop a love of learning and a desire to explore the world.

Children also begin to develop a sense of responsibility and a sense of duty. They learn to take care of their belongings and to follow rules and instructions. This helps them to develop a sense of responsibility and a sense of duty towards others.
