Hindu Literature: Comprising The Book of Good Counsels, Nala and Damayanti, The Ramayana and Sakoontala Anonymous, A story book from the Sanscrit at least possesses the minor merit of novelty The perfect language has been hitherto regarded as the province of scholars and few of these even have found time or taste to search its treasures And yet among them is the key to the heart of modern India as well as the splendid record of her ancient Gods and glories The hope of Hindostan lies in the intelligent interest of England Whatever avails to dissipate misconceptions between them and to enlarge their intimacy is a gain to both peoples and to this end the present volume aspires in an humble degree to contribute The Hitopadeśa is a work of high antiquity and extended popularity The prose is doubtless as old as our own era but the intercalated verses and proverbs compose a selection from writings of an age extremely remote The Mahabharata and the textual Veds are of those quoted to the first of which Professor M Williams in his admirable edition of the Nala 1860 assigns a date of 350 B C while he claims for the Rig Veda an antiquity as high as B C 1300 The Hitopadeśa may thus be fairly styled The Father of all Fables for from its numerous translations have come Sops and Pilpay and in later days Reineke Fuchs Originally compiled in Sanscrit it was rendered by order of Nushiravan in the sixth century A D into Persic From the Persic it passed A D 850 into the Arabic and thence into Hebrew and Greek In its own land it obtained as wide a circulation The Emperor Acbar impressed with the wisdom of its maxims and the ingenuity of its apologues commended the work of translating it to his own Vizir Abdul Fazel That minister accordingly put the book into a familiar style and published it with explanations under the title of the Criterion of Wisdom The Emperor had also suggested the abridgment of the long series of shlokas which here and there interrupt the narrative and the Vizir found this advice sound and followed it like the present
