When it comes to the health of your children a large part of it is about making sure they eat the right kinds of food This isn't always easy After all children can be picky about their food and they do tend to make the most unfortunate choices when it comes to snacks In their earlier toddler years you're probably going to rely on your doctor regarding your child's food options starting with switching from breastfeeding to formula Then you'll have to deal with baby foods and baby cereals When you start feeding him solid food this is when you need to set the stage for healthier habits for the future This means introducing vegetables early by giving them options about which vegetables to try out You can subtly encourage them by eating vegetables yourself while you're with them instead of forcing them to eat veggies In addition you'll also want to limit your child's exposure to caffeine sodas and fast food This way they won't be addicted to these unhealthy food items in the future
