Labeled the good one at a young age, embedded the burden she strived to build true. She graduated at the top of her class, never caused her parents trouble, and even settled down in their hometown of Chicago with her college boyfriend. Her life was perfect at least in the eyes of others. But when her mom unexpectedly dies, Marisa's eyes open for the first time. She leaves her boyfriend of four years and takes a job in Alaska to gain the freedom and individuality she's craved. After all, what would she gain by sticking around Chicago? She discovered her perfect family isn't so perfect, and everyone she cares for left her. Starting a new life in Anchorage, Alaska, she's unable to escape her family's hold when her dad's wedding announcement comes a mere six months after her mother's death. Attempts to contact her sisters in order to face this together are unsuccessful, leaving her feeling even more alone. Her family issues have to be pushed aside when her employer sends her and three others to a team building retreat in King's Gate. It's the last thing Marisa wants to do until everywhere she turns, she finds Zach Greer. This is one out of three novellas in The Washington Triplet Series.
